DINING GUIDE

SEAFOOD

Phuket is a seafood lovers paradise. Tourists will find the island to be a haven of restaurants near the beaches, serving the freshest catch from the sea. Where does the fun in seafood dining begin? At the source.

Watching the fishermen bring their catch to shore occurs at the first light of dawn on most of Phuket's beaches. If you are on the beach at this time, the fishermen will greet you with smiles and allow you to pose for a picture with the biggest fish.

There are several varieties of seafood and just as many methods of preparation. A description of some favorite Thai seafood dishes follows.

SHELLFISH

Oysters on the half shell served chilled with a garlic-lemon and chilli sauce topped with chinese mustard. Most restaurants serve this as an appetizer... truly irresistible! Another method of preparing oysters are to have them fried, boiled, or stewed in a clay pot with fragrant basil leaves. Cockles, clams, mussels, and scallops are more shellfish choices available in Phuket. These shellfish are either aromatically steamed with sweet herbs, or sauteed in garlic butter. In selecting shellfish, it is deemed fresh when the membrane is clear.

FISH

Steamed Fish (Pla Neung) is served in a fish-shaped tray atop a burner. Every restaurant has its own variety of garnishings for steamed fish. Some are topped with preserved soya beans, ginger, garlic and onions. Others combine minced pork with preserved lemon, preserved leeks, chillies, onions, or shallots. Snappers, groupers, sea bass, sea perch, mullet, skip jack, and trevally are recommended fish, for steaming. Sweet and Sour Fish (Pla Preeo Wan) is a deep fried fish with a simmered sauce made from arrowroot, baby cucumbers, tomatoes, pineapple, and onions, ladled over the fish. Fish with Three Sauces (Pla Sam Rod) is a deep-fried fish served with a combination of three sauces. Deep-fried mustard greens are used as garnishing. Flounder, skip jack, and sole are recommended for this special Thai dish. Fried Fish with Garlic and Pepper (Pla Thawat Krathiam) is pan-fried, and seasoned with fried garlic and a strong dash of pepper. Barbecue Fish (Pla Yang) is a taste treat wrapped in banana leaf and barbequed directly on the grill.

When selecting a fresh fish, the eyes must be shining, and not dull or glazed. The body must be firm when pressed and the gills should be a rich red color.

LOBSTERS

Lobsters are usually kept in tanks. Lobsters can be steamed and served with garlic butter.

Seafood restaurants pride themselves in their own secret sauce recipes to accompany your order. In choosing lobsters, the joint between the head and tail must be translucent and not of a black discoloration.

Le Beaulieu
- for a memorable experience.

Kata Thani Hotel
Kata Noi Beach, Phuket 83000 Tel: (076) 381124-7, 381417-25

PRAWNS

A wide variety of prawns are available grey or pink. Tiger prawns are commonly called jumbo prawns. They are usually barbequed and the meat pulls easily away from the shell. Slit in half, and sauteed with garlic butter, is another popular way of cooking prawns.

Smaller prawns can be deliciously prepared with steamed herbs, fried with garlic pepper, or baked with salt. But one should not leave Phuket without trying Tom Yum Goong, the undeclared national soup of Thailand made of lemon grass, ginger, and shrimp. When selecting prawns, the head should not be discolored, nor should they have an unpleasant smell.

CRABS

Crabs taste great when fried with curry powder. A plate of chilli crabs with extra hot peppers is for persons who love hot food. Crab claws, with glass noodles and celery is a mild and tempting Thai dish served in a clay pot. Barbequed crabs is an interesting way of preparation, while steamed crabs are the European way of savoring the natural sweetness of the meat. To assure freshness, crabs must be alive when you select them.

Pole houses clinging to the shores of Phuket

Since the turn of the 20th century, Phuket has been the leader of the South, paving the way for modern transportation, world trade, and tourism on an international scale. Yet to look back upon old Phuket, 89 years ago, is to do so with affection and a sense of pride. For Phuket's rapid advancement into the 1900's was met with no resistance, and the islanders saw it as the best of times to be alive.

A PASSAGE TO PHUKET

Let us become time travellers ourselves and journey back to those days of yore, when elephants roamed the jungle and pirates sailed the seas. Through the following pages we can catch a glimpse of how life was like on the island of Phuket, and see how this adventurer's paradise has retained its natural beauty.

Southern police patrol

POPULATION.— Amazingly, the population of Phuket in the early 1900's was a mere 6,000; with the majority living in pole houses over the tidal waters. Phuket's population today is a mix of 140,000 residents from around the world; and, this tropical island receives five times as many international travellers to its shores every year. Yet this dynamic growth does not disrupt the harmony nor the flow of positive energy. Today, like a century ago, the island hospitality is still as warm as the southern sun.

TRANSPORTATION.— The construction of the Southern Railway Line in 1918, lead the south into the era of modernization. The automobile found its way to Phuket by ferry, sea planes flew into the tranquil waters on the eastern shores, and great ocean liners called upon this important sea port in the Andaman Sea.

NATURAL BEAUTY.— Surin Beach was a natural choice for Phuket's premier golf course. The emerald fairway melts into the Andaman Sea, and the amber sunsets provide a breathtaking view over the course that can still be played today.

The ridge of verdant hills in the province are a natural reservoir from which innumerable springs flow, through the jungle, to the sea. A century ago, wild elephants, rhinoceros, tiger, buffalo, and thousands of beautiful birds inhabited the hills of Phuket. Over the century, Phuket still retains its natural beauty as it continues to be one of the most enchanting places in S.E. Asia.

A captured tiger in the wilds of Phuket

An interesting passage from Dr. Koenig's diary in 1779, reads: "24.— A tiger visited our house, but was satisfied with only one goose for this time, which he carried away with him to his hiding place, which was about 200 yards from our house in a dense opening wood at the back of the house....."

"27, 28.— I continued to collect insects. Towards evening I met a wild elephant, from which I had to escape."

Phuket will undoubtedly lure wanderlust adventurer's to its sparkling shores as it has done for centuries past. Let us look back upon our time passage through Phuket with fondness, realizing that this very moment, like then, is the best of times to be alive.

FRUITS OF THAILAND

WATERMELON

(TANG-MO)

To start your day, or at anytime to refreshen yourself –remove the seed & try a couple of slices of Thai tropical watermelon. Every bite is full of juice.

SEASON: All year round.

RAMBUTAN

(NGOR)

This kind of fruit with a hairy red rubbery shell is very well known in Thailand & other Asian countries. The flavoured meat is a must to try. Slightly cut round the middle with a knife to remove shell and then cut the meat to remove the seed.

SEASON: May to July.

PAPAYA

(MALA-KOR)

Refreshing & very rich in flavour. Try a slice of ripe papaya with a squeeze of lemon or lime juice. You can also eat unripe papaya as Thai salad with a lot of ingredients.

SEASON: All year round.

CUSTARD APPLE

(NOI-NA)

With the help of both palms, gently squeeze to open the fruit & enjoy the very soft & sweet taste of the meat with a spoon. Watch out for the seed in every particle.

SEASON: June to August.

LONGAN (LAMYAI)

The dark brown & very thin shell is easily cracked by a squeeze between thumb & forefinger. Every bite of translucent meat is delightful with sweet taste & juicy. Watch out for the hard stone. Grown in the North of Thailand.

SEASON: May to July

LYCHEE (LINCHEE)

Peel away the reddish skin with your thumb nail & let the sweet & sour taste of the fruit dry up your thirst. Watch out for the stone.

SEASON: April to May.

MANGO

(MA-MUANG)

You will find the best flavoured mango in this part of the world – try unripe mango with a mixture of sugar & salt for dipping. However, you may like to try a taste of ripe mango. It can be served alone or on sticky rice sprinkled with sesame seed & topped with sweet coconut milk.

SEASON: March to June.

MANGOSTEEN

(MANG-KHUD)

Gently cut about ½ inch deep round the middle. Remove the top portion & you will find the pure white flesh underneath the thick skin.

SEASON: June to October.

STRAWBERRY

An abundant fruit grown well in the northern area of Thailand. Thai's prefer with salt & sugar to give a sweet & sour taste. Or, try a fresh strawberry juice from the mixer with ice & sugar.

SEASON: December to February

BANANA (KLUEY)

You can eat fresh as a fruit or add syrup & deep-fry with a coating of flour as a dessert. There are 3 different kinds; Kluey Hom, Kluey Nam-Wah, & Kluey Khai, all different in size & flavour.

SEASON: All year round.

PINEAPPLE

(SAPAROT)

Pineapple is very rich in flavour & vitamin C. You will find the taste of Phuket pineapple is special – meat is pale in colour, a lot more crispy. Not too juicy or sweet. However, you will enjoy the difference with a pinch of salt to smooth the taste. The only pineapple where you can eat the core.

SEASON: All year round.

COCONUT

(MA-PRAO-ONN)

With a straw you can sip straight from the shell the natural & healthy fresh fruit juice. Then scrape out with a spoon the soft white flesh from inside the shell. You may need an expert to open the coconut for you. There's an art to making a hole in the top portion of the fruit with a hatchet to get the juice & flesh.

SEASON: All year round.

ROSE APPLE

(CHAMPOO)

With the different varieties of Rose Apple; some have bright green skin some have pink skin. They are different in sizes, although they all have white interior & the same flavour. Cut in half—remove seeds. Add sugar & salt to bring out the flavour.

SEASON: March to May.

DISCOVERING THAILAND'S TREASURES

The Thais are masters at cloth weaving

One of the most perplexing situations a tourist will have to face before he goes home is: what souvenir of Thailand should I buy? Silk, woodcarvings, silver, brassware . . . the list is endless.

Armed with a knowledge of the history of these native crafts, the selective shopper will be mentally equipped to choose a bit of Thailand that will remind him of his visit for years to come. Let's take a look at a few of these Thai creations.

Thailand has been weaving silk cloth for centuries. In 1976 the Queen's SUPPORT program set up centers to train people to weave the cloth in the age-old people powered method of spinning wheels and looms; the results are visible in silk showrooms throughout Thailand.

Along with silk, teakwood is another singular industry that brings out the talents of Thai craftsmen. Whether it is fashioned into a miniature elephant of only a few grams, or a two meter tall, pachyderm weighing almost as much as the real animal, the wood workers attention to precise detail is their hallmark.

Teakwood is so valuable that not a scrap is wasted, and the smaller pieces are used as the foundation for lacquerware. They are shaped into bowls, platters, and boxes. The uneven surface is filled in with clay and made smooth. Then, over a period of months, seven coats of lacquer are applied and finally a pattern is appliquéd in gold leaf.

Another example of the Thais inherent creativity is shown in their handpainted parasols and folding fans which are being used the world over as decorator items.

The paper is made from the bark of the mulberry tree; the bamboo is split by hand and the holes are punched with a foot powered bow-drill. Finally, they are hand-painted with designs of birds, dragons and village scenes.

At the brassware centers, a bell tone resonates from the workshops as men concentrate on tapping decorative designs into goblets and jewelry. As a bonus, "modern" brassware is coated so that it needs no polishing. But this is not the only metal craft done in Thailand.

Some handicrafts unique to the South include gold neiloware from Nakhon Sri Thammarat, enamelware from Songkhla, and pewterware from Phuket. Phang Nga and Pattani are renowned for incorporating a black geometric design in their basketry and wicker furniture; while in Phuket, batik clothing reflects the colorful flair of the South.

Patong and Phuket Town are excellent places to have some custom clothes made to order by the resident dressmakers and tailors. Whether you bring them your own personal sketches, or have clipped a photograph of the style you wish, you can be assured of receiving a quality garment within 24 hours, or at most a few days if detailed work is involved. Imported linens, blended wools, and print cottons are popular fabrics to choose from, while the lustrous Thai silk is hard to resist.

The colored gemstones sparkling under the lights of the jewelry store windows can make anyone stop dead in their tracks. Phuket has a first rate lapidary on the island, while other stones or set pieces of precious and semi-precious quality are hand picked from Bangkok. Pearls are the speciality of Phuket and they come in a variety of makes, sizes, and colors. From Phuket's pearl farms come the rare south seas pearl, cultured pearls, and mabe pearls in every shade of cream, to pink, and black. Imitation pearls from Phuket are made from ground pearl dust and cemented by a secret formula. Freshwater pearls are imported and come in every color of the rainbow.

UNDERSEA ADVENTURES IN PHUKET

Phuket is fast becoming the #1 destination of globetrotting snorkelers and SCUBA divers, and the reason is this, it is a holiday kingdom with a galaxy of fantastic dive sites -- and the secret is out! Possessing an incredibly varied shoreline, and clear, calm seas tinted by living coral reefs and studded with scores of verdant isles, Phuket has always been an ideal location for sport diving. What kept these sites hidden from the "outside" world was their remote, and sometimes inaccessible settings. During the past two decades, an international airport has been built, and roads have been improved. The result is that divers and snorkelers now have easy access to hundreds of dive-sites.

Curious diver inspects a bed of sea anemones

*The ubiquitous anemone and the pretty and harmless Feather
Starfish*

Phuket is a perfect dive center: it has reasonable accommodations, several modern dive shops, and uncountable dive and snorkel opportunities along its west coast. The scores of nearby islands and the clear waters of the Andaman Sea nourish an underwater spectacle which includes a cast of thousands: soft corals cover the rocks with a living mantle of color and graceful sea-fans cling to the walls and sway with the current, while sponges and sea anemones add outlandish shapes and vibrant hues to the setting. Through this silent wonderworld glide hundreds of boldly colored tropical fish; moving through the scene like well-rehearsed and gloriously costumed chorus lines. While Phuket's dive sites are accessible from the road, diving the offshore islands will require the use of a boat.

Ugly but harmless common Sea Cucumber

The fortunes of Phuket have been married to boats for centuries, so there's a wide variety from which to choose, from chartering long-tail boats (the utility boat of Thailand) to a luxury yacht complete with captain, crew, and divemaster; or even an express boat to Phi-Phi, the most exotic do-it-yourself snorkel holiday in Thailand.

To begin your Phi-Phi Island adventure, take your swim fins, mask and snorkel, and board one of the tour boats which departs Phuket for Phi-Phi every morning. After heading east for two hours the boat lands in Tonsai Bay on Phi-Phi Don, the largest of the islands. Here, the passengers disembark and the "overnighter" heads for the bungalows, while the "day trippers" head for the water.

The Sea Squirt, a crustacean often mistaken for a sponge

Phi-Phi Don is actually two separate islands joined across the middle by a coco tree-covered causeway, 100 meters wide and one kilometer long. On both sides of this land bridge are calm, clear bays which nurture immense coral gardens. One look below the surface into this realm reveals an incredible variety of colorful corals, large sea fans, and pastel tinted gorgonians; with tropical fish everywhere! More than 20 kilometers of shoreline encircles the twin islands; a coast laced with coral kingdoms on its eastern shores and steep wall dives on its western sides. Although the islands have not been carelessly plundered by man, the bungalows and the daily boat service from Phuket and Krabi have dimmed their pristine charm. For the discerning diver who desires to dive where few have been before him, then only the Similan Islands will suffice.

The islands are scalloped with white sand beaches between rocky points of land. Off the western shores, the boulders are covered with soft corals and they form tunnels and caves which provide the shelter for thousands of tropical fish. On the eastern side, the diving is completely different; here the extensive coral reef is studded with coral heads which nearly reach the surface. With underwater visibility up to 25 meters and schools of boldly colored reef-fish, these islands are the answer to an underwater photographer's prayer.

Although their distance from the beaten path of tourism has insured their beauty; the islands are easily visited by the adventurous. Day tours from Patong Beach on Phuket are available from November to April and the voyage takes a little over three hours one-way. If you are a serious diver you will want to take a dive tour of several days duration arranged by one of the dive shops.

The scourge of many swimmers - the Sea Urchin

Anyone who can remember to breathe through his mouth can dive the undersea kingdom, whether they can swim or not. Just bring yourself to the southern shores and Phuket will provide the equipment, the instruction, the transportation, and the dive sites -- at a fraction of the cost of diving locations elsewhere.
